

RED, WHITE & BLUE

Cowbells

Mayor Bob Lee was running for re-election. He was hosting a local rally, and wanted to handout something to the crowd that was going to cause some excitement and make some noise. He thought that Cowbells would be a perfect choice and decided to purchase a couple hundred of these in assorted colors to complement his campaign. Imprinted with his name, campaign slogan, and a message to re-elect him, these were then handed out to everyone at his rally. As the Mayor spoke, the crowd would ring their cowbells in response to his ideas and comments. The cowbells created a "moo-ving" display of support of sight and sound and were a huge hit.

As director of community services Tom Smith was introducing a new outreach program for single parents in his hometown of Vermillion Lake. He understood how hectic and stressful life can be so he decided to purchase something to hand out to people at the local community festival. Tom bought foam stress relievers imprinted with the programs website and phone number on them. The stress balls were well received and sparked great interest and referrals for the new program.

Red, White & Blue Beach Balls

Sally Rhine was head of the committee to get a school levy passed. She planned several fun events to promote the levy and educate the voters. One of the events was a barbeque on the beach. As a welcome gift, she handed out red, white, and blue beach balls to every attendee. The beach balls were printed with her name, a message that said "Vote yes on Issue 2," and her office phone number. The event hosted over 150 people and Sally had the pleasure to network with almost all of them. The beach balls were a big hit as well, as everyone took one to give to their kids, and to play around with on the beach. After the barbeque her office received many calls about the levy.
